

17. The Story of the Burial Ammarul

A long time ago, at a place on the banks of the Yamuna River in Vadanath, three people who appeared in the Antanar clan understood Arundhavam. Their names were given as Suban, Sangan, Sangan. Because of their constant penance for ages, three planes from heaven came down to earth to take them away. The three penitents boarded those planes separately. Airplanes rose into the sky. Then there was a snake with a fetus in that place. Three saw it. Sangan looked at Garuda and shouted, "Garuda! Let go of the snake." The baby gave birth to the snake. As a result, Sanchan fell from the plane and fell to the ground. Sangan thought that Sangan had fallen from the plane to the ground because he had let go of the snake. He said, "Karuta! Kill the snake." In this way, the fetus again returned to Pam. Changan also fell from the plane due to the crime. The virtue he had acquired was also lost. Subhan was watching all these things. He did not speak. As he knew that all living beings consume their benefits according to their merits and demerits, he was humble without speaking. Only his plane reached the skies. He enjoyed sitting as one of the gods. Modesty makes one of the gods; They all understood that immodesty leads to hell.
